Old Guard Fall Art Show

Art is a valuable addition to our lives, especially in retirement. What we create, what we display, and how we share it tells much about who we are. Here within the Old Guard family there are many ways for us to gain a sense of well being by expressing ourselves creatively. At our October 13th meeting we will be exhibiting works by our members and their mates. In our past show we viewed drawings and sketches, oil and acrylic canvases, photographs, objets d'arte from hobby collections, weaving and knitting -- in essence anything that provides us with pleasure to view, and which excites us to create is eligible to be exhibited in our upcoming October Art Show.

Our exhibitions must of current necessity be viewed online. As a first step, I request that members contact me, Steve Loewengart, to express their interest in exhibiting. The show will be run by the members of our Photography Group, and will require participants to provide a picture of each work of art they want to exhibit. The picture can be taken with a digital camera or cell phone and emailed to me. As this virtual art show will be part of our zoom meeting, each artist will get the opportunity to explain their work, their inspiration and how they take pride and joy in their work.

Deadline for submission is September 25th.

Please contact me, Steve Loewengart, about displaying your work or collection:

It's Not Just a Hole

Editors Note: Coming upon an unexplained hole in the ground always reminds me of the Tungus shamans of Siberia. They believe holes could be portals to the benevolent spirits residing in the lower world. The shamans would use these portals in ceremonies of empowerment, journeying to the lower world and merging with these helping spirits.

Holes in the ground come in all sizes, shapes and surroundings. Some are accidental while others are designed. Some lead nowhere while others are portals to someplace. With all the construction going on in streets and sidewalks, it's hard to miss spotting an earthy depression on a morning walk, but often we are left to wonder what exactly is going on down there.

The crater on the left, just down the block from the White Plains Library, resulted in disruption last month to drivers, pedestrians and water users when a ruptured water main caused a major street to collapse.

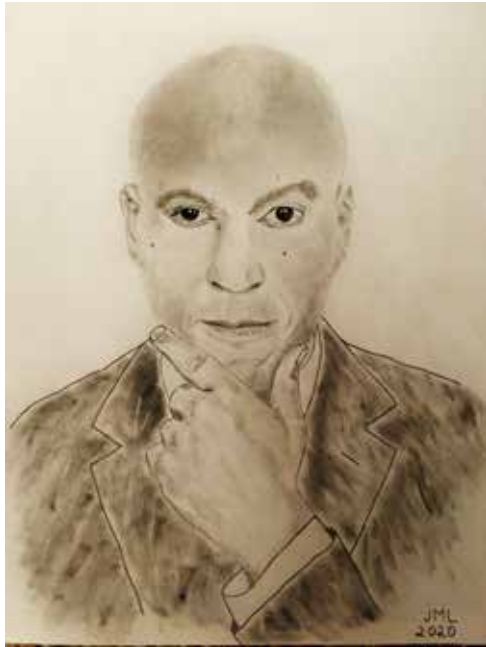

The cavity on the right was created to test water leaking into an underground garage at a condo occupied by a couple of Old Guard members.

When I was a little boy, like most children, I loved digging in my backyard with a spoon or small shovel. My mother told me that if I dug too far, I might reach China. I never did.
